Connecting People to Nature for 100 Years

from the president

There's a lot to be said for fall. It has some of the year's best scenery and gives us time to reboot after summer before things rev up for the holidays. For me, this fall in particular is a chance to look back on my first year as Forest Preserve District president and the ways this agency has worked during that time to support its guiding principles.

To better collaborate with the people we serve, the District worked with residents on the commemorative 100-mile DuPage Forest Preserves Century Trail and the preservation of 9 acres near Waterfall Glen in Darien. We partnered with the county on several projects as well, including one that will allow part of Fullersburg Woods in Oak Brook to provide flood relief to its neighbors in Hinsdale.

As a steward of natural resources, we continued to improve some of the best prairies, woodlands and wetlands in northern Illinois and hosted our first "Bio Blitz." In one 24-hour period, ecologists, scientists and volunteers in four forest preserves cataloged more than 800 kinds of plants and animals, including some never before identified in DuPage.

And so residents could better connect with nature, the District added 2 miles of trails at St. James Farm in Warrenville and offered dozens of special events to mark the agency's centennial. It also began the renovation of Oak Meadows Golf Preserve in Addison, a project that will put the preserve at the forefront of sustainable environmental management practices.

But perhaps most important to taxpayers is that we maintained our AAA rating — the highest possible — from Standard & Poor's Financial Services and implemented new operational efficiencies. With an elected board dedicated solely to preserving open spaces (and with Michael Hullihan, our new executive director, bringing his strong leadership experience to the role), I'm confident the District will continue to offer value and exceptional services into the century ahead.

LIVE and On Demand

Can't make it to an upcoming Board of Commissioners meeting? Find the latest schedules and agendas and view proceedings live or on demand at dupageforest.org under About Us and Meetings and Agendas. Commission meetings and planning sessions are open to the public and take place at District headquarters at 35580 Naperville Road in Wheaton. Normally, commission meetings are at 9 a.m. on the first and third Tuesdays of the month, and planning sessions are at 9 a.m. on the second and fourth Tuesdays. At both the board discusses District business, hears public comments and staff reports, and votes on agenda items.

ECOLOGISTS ID ZEBRA MUSSELS IN TWO NEW LAKES

Over the summer, Forest Preserve District ecologists identified zebra mussels in Eagle Lake at Hidden Lake Forest Preserve in Downers Grove and Mallard Lake at Mallard Lake Forest Preserve in Bloomingdale.

Zebra mussels are fingernailsized striped nonnative mollusks that have spread across the U. S. by attaching to watercraft and bait buckets. They're prolific breeders, and large populations can filter all of the water in a lake in one day, consuming plankton that native species rely on for food.

As the District monitors waters near the two lakes, it's working with volunteers to let anglers and boaters know how a few simple steps can keep these mussels out of other waters.

- Drain and remove all water, mud, plants and animals from your fishing gear before you leave the shore.
- Wash and dry anything that comes in contact with the water, including tackle, clothes and pets. Use hot water (over 104 degrees) or a power washer. If possible, let items dry for five days. You can't see the juvenile zebra mussels with the naked eye, and they can survive out of water. If you don't clean and dry your gear, you can easily move them from lake to lake.
- Juveniles can also hitchhike in bait buckets, so never move bait buckets from one body of water to another, and never dump bait in a lake or waterway. Empty bait buckets in garbage cans before leaving the forest preserve.
- Never put plants or animals in a body of water unless they came out of that body of water.

ONLINE PROGRAM REGISTRATION STARTS OCT. 5

Starting Oct. 5, register for your favorite archery and fishing clinics, guided hikes and paddles, wildlife programs and more 24/7 on your computer, tablet or phone and reserve campsites and picnic areas up to 12 months in advance.

Just visit dupageforest.org and click on Register and then Create an Account to get started. After you set up your account, you can use it to register and pay for activities, add your name to wait lists if programs are full, and reserve campsites, shelters and picnic grounds. You can also log in at any time to see what's next on the calendar for you and your family.

On Tuesday, Dec. 1 you'll also be able to purchase 2016 permits for off-leash dog areas, private boats and model crafts online. Of course you'll still be able to make all of your permit plans weekdays 8 a.m. – 4 p.m. over the phone at (630) 933-7248 or in person at District headquarters in Wheaton.

FOUR-LEGGED FUN COMES TO HAWK HOLLOW

On Sept. 1 the Forest Preserve District celebrated the grand opening of the new off-leash dog area at Hawk Hollow Forest Preserve in Bartlett at Stearns Road and Bittersweet Drive. The 34acre area has a 59-car parking lot, 2.1 acres for dogs of all sizes and almost an acre just for pups under 25 pounds. An enclosed 29.2-acre area features a 1.2mile limestone trail. Each area has at least one entry with standard, double and maintenance gates. To use the area, dog owners must have valid District permits, which are available through Visitor Services at (630) 933-7248.

In October 2012 the District entered into a cooperative agreement with railway and transportation company CN. In conjunction with work along its tracks near Munger Road at Pratt's Wayne Woods Forest Preserve in Wayne, CN agreed to expand wetlands and enhance habitat at the preserve and relocate the District's off-leash area to the better-suited location at Hawk Hollow.

MANY Thanks

The Forest Preserve District thanks its 2015 Centennial Partner sponsors for their support of its milestone celebration and its ongoing efforts to connect people with nature.

The District would also like to thank donors who contributed to its efforts between May 10 and Aug. 15. To make your own tax-deductible donation or to learn how sponsorships and financial support can benefit the District, visit dupageforestgiving.org.

The Stars of Fall

by JAYNE BOHNER, COMMUNICATIONS & MARKETING

sters might very well be the forest preserves' forgotten flowers. People spend summer gazing at coneflowers, black-eyed Susans and other bright bloomers, but when fall arrives they turn their eyes to the leafy canopies and forget that some DuPage County flowers are still hard at work.

Asters, which typically bloom between August and the first frost, get their common name from their shape. Aster is Greek for "star." It's the same word origin that gives us "asterisk," "asteroid," "astronaut," "Astro" from "The Jetsons," etc.

At one time, the genus Aster contained over 600 species worldwide, but in the 1990s, molecular research revealed that flowers that looked quite similar were genetically different.

(Some of the chromosomes were slightly larger and more symmetrically shaped if you really must know.) The common ancestor shared by most of what we call "asters" in North America was different than its European or Asian counterparts. As a result, most of the asters on other continents remained in the Aster genus, and most in North America became part of a new genus, Symphyotrichum, or roughly "soft hairy things that grow together," referring to the plants' fuzzy stems and leaves. (It's not as poetic as "star," but it gets its point across.)

Asters' late-blooming season is likely an evolutionary adaptation. Asters need insects to carry pollen from flower to flower so they can produce seeds. By offering dining options later in the year, they're more likely to get the attention of

Support Your Local Hoverfly

No, it's not a wasp. (Not that there's anything wrong with that.) It's a member of one group of insects that you'll see feeding on asters: the hoverflies. These busy nonstinging buzzers may look like wasps or bees, but it's all a show to keep away hungry predators. If you're an aphid, though, beware. As an adult, a hoverfly dines solely on nectar, but as a slug-looking larva, it feasts on hundreds of aphids, which makes these flies welcomed guests in any garden.

A Bouquet in Every Blossom

Like many bloomers — sunflowers, goldenrods, blackeyed Susans — asters are "composite" flowers. What appears to be a single flower is actually a cluster of tiny stemless flowers, or "florets," each with its own pistil, stamen and other assorted reproductive parts that produce seeds. On asters, the center is comprised of several squat tube-shaped "disk" florets. "Ray" florets around the edge produce the strap-shaped flowers that look like petals.

Josef Well

pollinators that might otherwise pass them over for competing spring- or summertime species.

Of course pollination is a two-way street, and asters provide much-needed calories for insects after other flowers have faded. Milkweeds may be the main plants on monarchs' minds in summer, but in fall, asters are vital fueling stations for these butterflies as they prepare to head toward Mexico. Hoverflies, queen bumblebees and other nectar-eating insects that winter right here in DuPage need asters to help them bulk up before heading underground or curling up in leaf litter or rotten logs.

But there's more to an aster than just flowers, and the county's six-legged residents rely on those parts, too. The caterpillars of painted ladies, pearl crescents and other butterflies feed on the plants' greenery. Pearl crescents that hatch late in the season are particularly reliant because they overwinter as caterpillars and need to fatten up on aster leaves before the cold weather sets in.

Fortunately for people and pollinators alike, the forest preserves are home to several species of asters, some quite common. Heath, smooth blue, New England and hairy asters all grow in DuPage prairies and fields; panicled asters colonize in wetter soils. In the county's woodlands, side-flowering, Short's and Drummond's asters provide springtime pinks, whites and yellows under the darker, richer colors of the leafy canopies. But no mater where they grow, they're only there through fall, so let's enjoy them while they last. • t's time to put away the shorts and tank tops for another year and get back in the habit of packing lunches and getting everyone to the bus stop on time (not to mention practices and rehearsals). Schedules get hectic (and we won't even get into what happens once Thanksgiving rolls around) but the perfect break is no farther away than your local DuPage County forest preserve.

Visit Willowbrook Wildlife Center.

On some days you may want to sit in front of a DuPage County map and ponder which of the forest preserves' 145 miles of trails and scores of habitats you want to visit, but sometimes you need a quick pick that will offer a little bit of everything.

At Willowbrook Wildlife Center in Glen Ellyn, your wildlife spotting skills can take a break as you stroll along the paved exhibit trail, where you're guaranteed to see the bobcat, red fox, woodchuck, eagle and other residents that live at the center full time. On the path through the butterfly garden, look for late-in-the-season generations of skippers, painted ladies and monarchs as they fill up on nectar from fall-blooming flowers, and behind the visitor center take the half-mile Nature Trail through the "Back 40" and its restored prairie, savanna, woodland and wetland, a true buffet of native DuPage habitats.

 Sample prairies, woodlands and wetlands — and come face-to-face with DuPage wildlife — on a walk through Willowbrook Wildlife Center.

Fullersburg Woods is one of the county's maple-tree hot spots.

Walk through a maple forest.

Gray skies can sometimes make fall feel like one long rainy day, but a trip to a forest preserve filled with sugar and black maples can trick you into thinking the sun is out regardless of the weather.

Fullersburg Woods in Oak Brook, West DuPage Woods in West Chicago and Maple Grove in Downers Grove are three of the county's brightest fall forest preserves. Maple Grove in particular is an electrified knockout this time of year. Some of its maples got their start 170 years ago, when settlers from the east were taking down mature hardwoods for lumber. Without taller trees to block out the sun and rain, the saplings were able to grow in leaps and bounds, forming the towering tunnels of gold visitors enjoy today.

Find a forest preserve close to home.

Fighting traffic to reach a great open space where you can relax and unwind can be a stress inducer in itself, but fortunately there's a forest preserve no more than 10 minutes from any business or home in DuPage County.

At Meacham Grove in Bloomingdale you'll find a beautiful example of a native woodland, where the leaves of oak, walnut and hickory trees filter out the bustle of busy streets. A 2.5-mile trail on the east side loops around Maple Lake through adjacent wetlands and connects with a 0.5mile footpath on the west side of Bloomingdale-Roselle Road, which carries you through the 48-acre Meacham Grove Nature Preserve. This area received its special state designation in 2012 thanks to its forest, where you may spot a northern flicker, red-shouldered hawk or wood thrush, all birds in greatest need of conservation in Illinois.

Hawk Hollow in Bartlett — 1,000 acres of gently rolling landscape with one of the largest unbroken blocks of grassland bird habitats in the county — is accented with mature woodlands and bisected by a river. Three miles of trails meander through the preserve and connect with West Branch in Bartlett.

If you're further west, 9 miles of footpaths at West Chicago Prairie in West Chicago thread through one of northern Illinois' highest-quality prairies. Aside from its namesake habitat, the preserve boasts woodlands and a savanna that's home to majestic bur oaks. (Keep Fido and your bicycle at home, though. Most of the preserve is part of the state-designated Truitt-Hoff Nature Preserve, where only human foot traffic is allowed.)

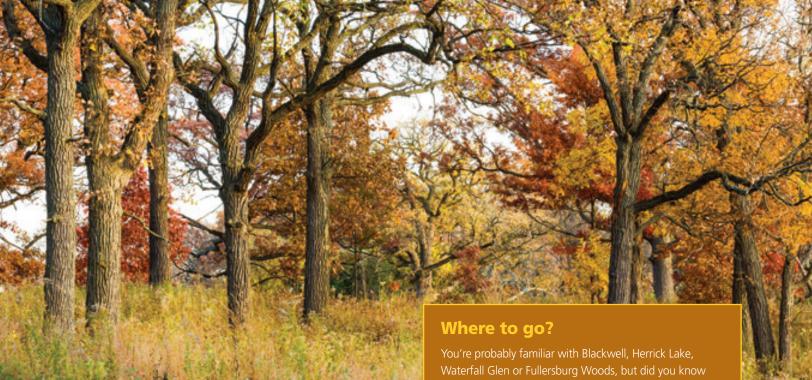

Colors multiply on Rush Lake at East Branch Forest Preserve.

Why yellow?

In summer, trees are busy producing chlorophyll, the chemical that allows them to convert sunlight into energy and makes their leaves look green. Sugar and black maple leaves also make yellow-orange compounds called carotenes, but the color is overpowered by chlorophyll's green pigment so you don't see it. (Carotenes help trees make chlorophyll and protect tissues in the leaves.) When trees get ready to drop their leaves in the fall, they stop making chlorophyll, which allows the carotenes to take center stage.

 For residents in northcentral DuPage County, Meacham Grove Forest Preserve and its woodlands are a short a drive from home.

Double your pleasure.

While oaks and maples offer beautiful colors across the treetops, in some forest preserves the display spills into the landscape below. There are over 30 lakes and 45 miles of waterways in DuPage County's forest preserves, and many that border deciduous trees provide spectacular mirror images, some with colors swirling in motion on top of the ripples.

From the parking lot on Glen Ellyn Road at East Branch in Glendale Heights, a 0.8-mile trail loops around Rush Lake and the northern shore of Sunfish Pond, both popular fishing spots. At Rush Lake in particular, the water reflects the vivid yellows and reds of maples and sumacs. At Wood Dale Grove in Wood Dale, Grove Lake amplifies the rich rusty oaks that line the 0.5-mile trail that circles the water.

 Waterfall Glen Forest Preserve's Rocky Glen area creates a relaxing soundtrack for soaking up the shades of the season. You're probably familiar with Blackwell, Herrick Lake, Waterfall Glen or Fullersburg Woods, but did you know you might live closer to an equally great forest preserve? (Hey, the county has over 60!) Well finding it is just a click or two away. Visit dupageforest.org and click on Places to Go and Forest Preserves. There you'll find a list of every DuPage forest preserve with quick info on parking, trails and available maps.

Listen.

We all know what planes, trains and automobiles sound like, but there's much to be said (or heard) about DuPage County's more natural features.

At the Rocky Glen area at Waterfall Glen in Darien, the tiered falls created by Civilian Conservation Corps workers in the 1930s provide an ideal soundtrack for viewing the drizzles of red and orange that pool on top of Sawmill Creek. At Warrenville Grove in Warrenville, the large-scale project that made the West Branch DuPage River a healthier waterway for insects, fish, birds and mammals created a lively stretch of bubbling riffles. The project also kept intact the preserve's historic millrace. Waters that rushed down this manmade channel 165 years ago directed the power of the river to a waterwheel, which turned gears inside a gristmill, where area farmers brought corn, rye, wheat and other "grist" to be ground into flour or meal.

But nothing roars "fall" more than wind through the treetops with crescendos that can drown out the heaviest rush hours. In the county's oak woodlands, where oaks' lower branches hang tight to leaves even after heavy snows, the rustles last into winter. In the center of the county, you can walk, jog or peddle from Danada in Wheaton, home to a savanna with bur oaks from the 1830s, west to Herrick Lake, with its own share of 150-year-old white, red and bur oaks.

So if you find yourself in a fall frenzy, find your fix in a DuPage forest preserve! •

The Trail of the Century

f you want a celebration to mark your first 100 years, it helps to have a lot of people on your Lplanning team, and when the Forest Preserve District was working on its lineup of centennial events, it had just that. One dedicated group of community volunteers offered to help develop a special way to mark the milestone. The result was the DuPage Forest Preserves Century Trail, a 100-mile commemorative trail over existing paths (and a few roads) that circles the county, connecting 33 different preserves. But the group wanted the trail to be more than a line on a map. They wanted it to present snapshots of the District's past. As a result, researchers dug through the archives for 11 stories trail trekkers can read along the way. Here's a look at a few of them.

Pratt's Wayne Woods: The Last Mastodon?

In 2005 less than a mile north of Pickerel Lake, researchers unearthed over 1,000 pieces of tooth, tusk and bone from a mature mastodon.

The bones were buried in what was once a 10-acre spruce-lined lake. The mastodon may have stopped at the lake for a drink and died of natural causes. It may have died nearby based on the location and the fact that the animal died about 11,000 years ago at the tail end of the mastodon era, many agree that this animal was likely one of the species' last.

Herrick Lake: I'll Take Glacial Formations for $500

Ten thousand years ago DuPage County was covered by a sheet of ice as tall as Willis Tower. As the glacier melted, ice and water shifted tons of rock and soil, which created a large depression in present-day Wheaton that filled with water: Herrick Lake. Glacier-formed lakes like this were scattered throughout DuPage, but most drained or filled with plants or eroding soils. Only Herrick Lake and the remote Spring Lake at Timber Ridge Forest Preserve remain. Every other lake you'll see in a DuPage forest preserve is man-made.

Despite its beginnings, this isn't exactly the same lake that stood here 100 years ago. Engineers have dredged, deepened and expanded it to keep it an attractive spot for anglers, boaters and picnickers alike. But if you're ever quizzed on glacier-formed lakes in DuPage County, you'll have the right answer.

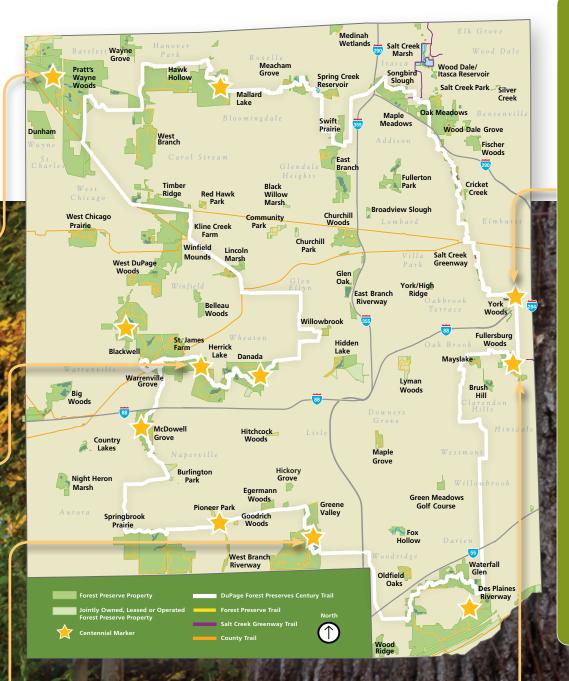

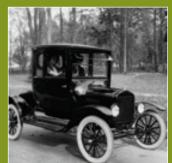

Greene Valley: Prehistoric Food Prep

Roughly 2,000 years ago, someone was cooking along this stretch of the East Branch DuPage River survey that found prehistoric knife tips and pieces of "cord-marked" pottery at the site.

Pottery appeared in Illinois during the Early Woodland period, which began about 3,000 years ago. By the end of the Late Woodland period a few centuries later, cord-marked pottery was common, especially in established settlements. Because of the pottery found at the site, there's a good chance people lived — and cooked — in a village there for several years.

People made cord-marked containers by striking wet clay with small paddles wrapped with cord. The cord created rows of parallel grooves, which made thinner pottery stronger and better able to conduct heat.

York Woods: Being Number 1

Visitors to York Woods stand in DuPage County's first forest preserve. The 1917 purchase marked the start of efforts to protect land for the "pleasure and recreation" of county residents. And the county bought it to build a road.

By today's standards it wasn't the most conservation-minded reason to preserve 70 acres, but as the Chicago Daily Tribune reported, "Commissioners of DuPage county, the road supervisors and the public spirited citizens" were "deeply interested in the project." The road extended 12th Street today's Roosevelt Road — from Chicago so motorists would have "a direct thirty mile drive without a turn through the southern edge of Wheaton."

Fullersburg Woods: The Men of V-1668

Between 1934 and 1938 Fullersburg Woods Forest Preserve was home to the men of Company V-1668 of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Most of the men were veterans of World War I. Their first job was to construct the camp's temporary barracks, which housed up to 200 enlistees. They built a boathouse (today's visitor center) and many of the bridges and shelters you'll pass along the trail. They worked at other forest preserves, too, constructing a picnic shelter at York Woods and shelters, a dam and fire rings at Waterfall Glen. During the Great Depression the CCC provided much-needed work for over 3 million unemployed men nationwide.
